Your "inner Alex" is showing again (e.g., fraudulent gaslighting and set-up manipulations).

I have no opinion as to whether or not the Alameda County case is stayed as to the Adli Law Group, P.C., and I have never stated an opinion about the issue other than to say that the normal practice is to assume the stay, and that it is safer to assume the stay than not, since the sanction for stay violation includes potential contempt.

As to Darius Adli personally, it appears that the law supports that there is no stay in place.

Serving the Summons and Complaint on the Adli Law Group, P.C. is a risk the process server and you took on when the two of you defied my instructions not to serve the Adli Law Group, P.C. Now, taking a default is quite another level of risk, which I cannot advise you about since I no longer represent you in the matter.

I have found no Ninth Circuit law expressly stating that the stay is in place as to the Adli Law Group, P.C. (or not in place) vis-a-vis a (potentially non-dischargeable) civil RICO cause of action. I believe you have not found such law either.

Don,

I'm glad to hear your opinion that the case against Adli was not stayed. They are past 30 days from service, thus in default.

I will be entering a default, and suggest that you consult with Ed and consider entering a default on behalf of the RIBC Plaintiffs.
